The Democracy, as you are aware, claim to be the especial friends of the soldiers. The question, of itself, so plain and simple, should have been answered by any candid, Ross, or any other profit man, had any rea-sonable objection to our being allowed to vote, he could state it. It is true many of us were away from "outquamman," but it is likewise true that needs every one of us could read and write; and what is still more remurkable, daily and weeldy we perused the papers of our count as well as the city. We lid not read one party sheet only, but we had the good send to examine closely both rides of every quation that was brought before the public. We wish those who voted against us had done the same thing; they, then at least, would live been able to discrimitate between a letter and a bill before the Legislature. We were in line doing our daty for our flag and our country our friends and our homes, our titles to outlands and the cause of Freedom in our common country, against a vile and wicked entry who were fighting to destroy if.
